What is Estate Planning? Estate planning is the process of arranging your affairs to meet your wishes regarding the use, conservation, and disposal of your property. It involves all of your properties, (stocks, bonds, cash, social security, life insurance, real estate) into a total program. In the absence of a property transfer plan, the resulting distribution of property may be inconsistent with wishes of the deceased. This could impose undue hardship upon the family and result in costly taxes and fees.

Some common objectives of a property transfer plan include: (1) provide security for the surviving spouse, minor children and incompetents, (2) provide an income for the widow for the rest of her life, (3) treating all children equitably, (4) helping a son get started in farming or other business, (5) minimizing estate and income taxes along with general estate settlement costs.

If you have not arranged for an orderly transfer of your property, it deserves serious consideration to do so now.

Purchasing Steers or Heifers

In purchasing steers or heifers this fall be sure to practice good management to reduce the incidence of shipping fever. Reducing stress factors to a minimum is the most effective way of lowering the incidence of shipping-fever. When you get the animals home unload them as quietly as possible and place them in a clean area. Be sure not to run the calves and isolate them from the rest of the herd for ten days to two weeks. Provide plenty of fresh, clean water and a limited amount of feed for the first weeks. Handle the calves as little as possible and give them a chance to adjust to their new surroundings for two weeks. Be certain to avoid surgical operations during this period.

Each day the cattle should be checked for such symptoms as runny nose, watering eyes, coughing, panting, decrease in appetite, depression listlessness, reluctance to move with the rest of the herd. Should symptoms appear, call your veterinarian immediately, as treatment should be applied as soon as possible.

Small Beef Cow Herds

For these small herds it is difficult to economically justify the growthy type bulls needed for improved calf production. One possible solution to this problem would be to artificially breed. Of course, this alternative creates some problems when cows are on pasture as they would need to be observed twice a day once in the morning and once in the afternoon and then gotten up. Demand for labor at these particular times will most likely be the determining factor as to whether a small beef herd owner would consider artificially breeding. This alternative is food for thought and may be worth considering for some farmers.
